

‘Shirley McKie. The Price of Innocence’ - Update

This week’s re-entry to the Scottish charts at number 9 was welcome and indicates that book sales continue to be healthy. A few people have complained that they have experienced difficulty in buying.

While most local bookshops have or can obtain copies they are easily available via the internet.

The book has encouraged interest from a number of film and documentary makers and we await them coming back with firm proposals.

Michael and Iain are delighted at the response from readers. Telephone calls, letters and e-mails have poured in expressing their enjoyment of the book and expressing their surprise at the depth of deceit at expert, police and political level.

We continue to hope that it will lead to a full judicial enquiry that will examine the system and the culture that allowed it all to happen. Further new evidence also opens up the possibility of further approaches to the Crown Office to have another criminal enquiry carried out into the behaviour of police and experts.

Thanks to everyone who has bought the book and please continue your support as we move towards the hoped for enquiries.
