

ISSUES FOR JUDICIAL ENQUIRY

In the lead up to the judicial enquiry I intend to highlight some issues that I hope the enquiry will investigate. While I have every confidence that the enquiry under Lord Chief Justice Campbell and his team will finally reveal the truth I am also aware that before any evidence is taken there is a massive amount of sometimes contrary information to understand and assimilate. My ongoing analysis of the thousands of documents I have been able to access has revealed a number of important issues that I hope the enquiry will turn its attention to and I intend to highlight some of them in the coming weeks and months.

‘Two mistakes were made by SCRO’

While the fact remains that the SCRO and their supporters have never been supported by a single independent enquiry over 11 years they will doubtless continue their policy of seeking to pull the wool over the eyes of the Judicial Enquiry in the way they did with the Justice 1 Enquiry.

At this latter enquiry the fact that we are not looking at one mistake but two – the so called ‘Shirley McKie (Y7) and ‘Marion Ross’ (QI2) prints - was studiously avoided. The sub-judice rule was misused by the enquiry, the SCRO experts and the Crown Office to avoid having to face this fact and allowed the SCRO experts and their supporters to propagate the fiction that there was a genuine ‘difference of opinion’ between experts.

The separation of these mistakes over the years by the Crown Office however points to a separate agenda that has little to do with who murdered Marion Ross and ascertaining the truth and more to do with covering up the lies and mistakes within every level of the Scottish justice system.

For the judicial enquiry to do its job it is my contention that both mistakes must be examined. This is clearly allowed for in the remit as the QI2 ‘mistake’ was revealed as a ‘consequence’ of the revelation that print ‘Y7’ was wrong.

Some issue to come:

- Admission of mistakes
- Misuse of the sub-judice rule.
- Why no prosecution of the SCRO experts
- Why are experts who support the misidentification still working within the SPSA
- The Lockerbie link.
- The issue of ‘difference of opinion’.
